‘And what have we to remember to bring tomorrow?’ Mrs Cooper asked, at half past three. Malcolm, sitting near the back, wondered why she said ‘we’. She wasn’t going to bring anything.

‘Something interesting, Mrs Cooper,’ said everyone else, all together.

‘And what are we going to do then?’

‘Stand up and talk about it, Mrs Cooper.’

‘So don’t forget. All right. Chairs on tables. Goodbye, Class Four.’

‘Goodbye, Mrs Cooper. Goodbye, everybody.’

It all came out ever so slow, like saying prayers in assembly. Class Four put its chairs on the tables, collected its coats and went home, talking about all the interesting things it would bring into school tomorrow.

Malcolm walked by himself. Mrs Cooper had first told them to find something interesting on Monday. Now it was Thursday and still he had not come up with any bright ideas. There were plenty of things that he found interesting, but the trouble was, they never seemed to interest anyone else. Last time this had happened he had brought along his favourite stone and shown it to the class.

‘Very nice, Malcolm,’ Mrs Cooper had said. ‘Now tell us what’s interesting about it.’ He hadn’t known what to say. Surely anyone looking at the stone could see how interesting it was.
Mary was going to bring her gerbil. James, Sarah and William had loudly discussed rare shells and fossils, and the only spider in the world with five legs.

‘It can’t be a spider then,’ said David, who was eavesdropping.

‘It had an accident,’ William said.

Isobel intended to bring her pocket calculator and show them how it could write her name by punching in 738051 and turning it upside down. She did this every time, but it still looked interesting.

Malcolm could think of nothing.

When he reached home he went up to his bedroom and looked at the shelf where he kept important things: his twig that looked like a stick insect, his marble that looked like a glass eye, the penny with a hole in it and the Siamese-twin jelly-babies, one red, one green and stuck together, back to back. He noticed that they were now stuck to the shelf, too. His stone had once been there as well, but after Class Four had said it was boring he had put it back in the garden. He still went to see it sometimes.

What he really needed was something that could move about, like Mary’s gerbil or William’s five-legged spider. He sat down on his bed and began to think.

Friday

On Friday, after assembly, Class Four began to be interesting. Mary kicked off with the gerbil that whirred round its cage like a hairy balloon with the air escaping. Then they saw William’s lame spider, James’s fossil, Jason’s collection of snail shells stuck one on top of the other like the leaning tower of Pisa, and David’s bottled conkers that he had kept in an air-tight jar for three years. They were still as glossy as new shoes.

Then it was Malcolm’s turn. He went up to the front and held out a matchbox. He had chosen it very carefully. It was the kind with the same label top and bottom so that when you opened it you could never be sure that it was the right way up and all the matches fell out. Malcolm opened it upside down and jumped. Mrs Cooper jumped too. Malcolm threw himself down on hands and knees and looked under her desk.
‘What’s the matter?’ Mrs Cooper said.

‘It’s fallen out!’ Malcolm cried.

‘What is it?’ Mrs Cooper said, edging away.

‘I don’t know – it’s got six legs and sharp knees... and sort of frilly ginger eyebrows on stalks—’. He pounced. ‘There it goes.’

‘Where?’

‘Missed it,’ said Malcolm. ‘It’s running under your chair, Mary.’

Mary squeaked and climbed on to the table because she thought that was the right way to behave when creepy-crawlies were about.

‘I see it!’ Jason yelled, and jumped up and down. David threw a book in the direction that Jason was pointing and James began beating the floor with a rolled-up comic.

‘I got it - I killed it,’ he shouted
‘It’s crawling up the curtains,’ Sarah said and Mrs Cooper, who was standing by the curtains, moved rapidly away from them.

‘It’s over by the door,’ Mary shrieked, and several people ran to head it off. Chairs were overturned.

Malcolm stood by Mrs Cooper’s desk with his matchbox. His contribution was definitely the most interesting thing that anyone had seen that morning. He was only sorry that he hadn’t seen it himself.

© Jan Mark 1986, from Story Chest: 1000 Bedtime Stories published by Viking Kestrel. Illustrations are printed with kind permission of Doffy Weir ©.
The One That Got Away

About the story

1. At the end of the day Mrs Cooper reminded Class Four that the next day they were to bring something interesting to school. After school Malcolm walked home

   A. alone in a group of friends with James and Sarah with Mrs Cooper

2. He was trying to think about what he could bring in to show the class. Last time he had brought his

   B. calculator stone penny with a hole in it interesting marble

3. The other children discussed what they were going to bring. Mary decided she would bring her

   C. cat mouse gerbil rabbit

4. When Malcolm got home he went into

   D. the kitchen the garden his bedroom the lounge

5. and looked at all of his interesting things. What he really needed was something that

   E. could move made a noise was funny was brightly coloured

6. On Friday after assembly, Class Four showed the interesting things they had brought. The first person to come to the front of the class was

   F. William Mary Sarah Jason
7. Then came James with his fossil and David with his conkers.
   Soon it was Malcolm’s turn. He went up to the front and held out a
   G. lego box  shoebox  matchbox  chocolate box.

8. Malcolm opened his box upside down and jumped back in surprise. He got on his hands and knees to look under the desk. It had fallen out! All of the children started looking but they did not know exactly what they were looking for. Only Malcolm knew that they were looking for
   H. his interesting stone  a matchbox  an insect  nothing at all.
   8 marks

9. Here are some of the events that happened in the story. Put them in the right order by numbering each line. The first event has been numbered for you.

   ...... on the way home the children discussed what they would bring in
   ...... the next day the class showed their objects
   ...... the class was in uproar
   ....1.. Mrs Cooper told the class to bring in interesting objects
   ...... the children looked at a gerbil, a spider, a fossil, snail shells and conkers
   ...... at home, Malcolm thought about what he could bring to show
   ...... then it was Malcolm’s turn
   2 marks
About the characters

10. The story says that Malcolm had chosen his box

   very carefully. It was the kind with the same label top and bottom

   Why do you think he had to be so careful in his choice of box

   ............................................................................................................................
   ............................................................................................................................
   ............................................................................................................................
   ............................................................................................................................
   1 mark

11. Malcolm opened it upside down and jumped.
    Mrs Cooper jumped too.

   Mrs Cooper was clearly nervous.
   Find another word or phrase in the story which tells us that Mrs Cooper was not very happy that the contents of Malcolm’s box had escaped.

   ............................................................................................................................
   1 mark
12. (a) Last year Malcolm had brought his interesting stone but the class had said it was boring. How did Malcolm feel about the reaction of the class?

............................................................................................................................................................
............................................................................................................................................................
............................................................................................................................................................

(b) Do you think Malcolm’s own feelings about the stone changed?

Yes [ ] No [ ]

What in the story tells you this

............................................................................................................................................................
............................................................................................................................................................
............................................................................................................................................................
............................................................................................................................................................
............................................................................................................................................................
............................................................................................................................................................
............................................................................................................................................................
............................................................................................................................................................
............................................................................................................................................................
............................................................................................................................................................
............................................................................................................................................................
......................................................
............................................................................................................................................................
............................................................................................................................................................

3 marks
13. The main character in this story is Malcolm. Some parts of the story tell you a lot about what kind of person he is. Look at the extracts below, which are from the story. Opposite each, write what it tells you about Malcolm’s character. (The first one has been done for you.)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Extract from the story</th>
<th>What it tells you about Malcolm’s character</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Malcolm … wondered why she said “we”. She wasn’t going to bring anything.</td>
<td>Malcolm noticed the funny way his teacher talked to the class. She did not mean what she said. He thought she should bring in something too. But he was not cheeky enough to say it out loud.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>…the shelf where he kept important things: his twig that looked like a stick insect, his marble that looked like a glass eye, the penny with a hole in it and the Siamese-twin jelly-babies, one red, one green and stuck together, back to back.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Malcolm opened it upside down and jumped. …Malcolm threw himself down on hands and knees and looked under her desk.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

6 marks

14. The writer says that the gerbil

whirred round its cage like a hairy balloon with the air escaping.

Explain what this tells you about the way the gerbil was moving.

................................................................................................................................................................................
................................................................................................................................................................................
................................................................................................................................................................................

2 marks
15. Malcolm opened it [the match box] upside down and jumped.

Choose six words from the Friday part of the story that tell us about the noise and movement in the classroom.

-
-
-
-
-
-

2 marks

16. Malcolm’s object is described in the story as definitely the most interesting thing that anyone had seen that morning.

Explain what is strange or funny in this line.

-
-
-

1 mark

17. Did you enjoy reading this story

Yes [ ] No [ ]

Explain, giving your own reasons, what you liked or did not like about the story.

-
-
-

3 marks
18.  (a) What did the class think Malcolm had in his box?

..............................................................................................................................................

(b) What do you think he had in his box?

.............................................................................................................................................. 2 marks

19. Why do you think the author chose “The One That Got Away” as the title for this story?

..............................................................................................................................................

.............................................................................................................................................. 2 marks

20. Would you like to have been in that class on that Friday morning?

Yes [ ]  No [ ]

Explain your reasons using parts of the story to help you.

..............................................................................................................................................

..............................................................................................................................................

.............................................................................................................................................. 2 marks